PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 1.—Staid, historic Philadelphia cast aside its traditional dignity today and paid homage to King Baseball.

For at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon, in the presence of President Hoover and a capacity crowd of 33,000 spectators, many of them frantic with excitement, the Philadelphia Athletics and the St. Louis Cardinals will clash at Shibe Park in the opening game of the 1930 World Series—a set of combats that promise thrills and drama galore.

The President is scheduled to toss out the first ball. Betting is even money that it will be a wild pitch.

Cool, fair weather, suitable for top-coats, will prevail, according to the weather man.
A deep mystery, based on psychology, has been thrown by Manager Connie Mack of the A's over the question of who will be his starting pitcher. The experts believe he will be "Lefty" Grove, the fireball king, but they suspect Mack may "cross" them as he did a year ago and spring a "dark horse."

On the other hand, Manager Gabby Street of the red birds is making no secret of his opening pitcher. He will be Burleigh Grimes, a great "money pitcher" who huris a wicked spit ball.

Eleventh hour reports that Frankie Frisch, star second baseman of the Cardinals, would be unable to play in the series because of an attack of lumbago were denied to International News Service today by both Manager Street and Frisch himself.

"I have a backache but no backache is going to keep me out of this World Series," said Frisch, with characteristic grit. "I'll be in there this afternoon if they have to carry me out on the diamond."

Frisch caught a severe cold in his back in a recent game in St. Louis. He told the writer when he stepped off the train the other day, that his back was giving him trouble but he felt certain it would not prevent him from playing in the series. When the Cardinals worked out yesterday afternoon at Shibe Park, Frisch was not present and this gave rise to the rumor that he was "out" for the series. Last night he underwent hot lamp and massage (Continued on Page 4)

Travel Club to Open Season Here Friday

Vacation is over and from foreign shores, from mountains and the sea, the folks have all come home and so the members of the Bristol Travel Club will get together for their first meeting of the fall season on Friday, October 3rd, at 3 p. m.

After a greeting by the president, Mrs. Frank Lehman, echoes from Denver will be brought by Mrs. J. P. Lichtenberger, president of the Philomusian Club, of Philadelphia.

Junior work is attracting much attention among clubs for women, and Mrs. John Schlager will tell how the younger women are being interested. The meeting will be in charge of Mrs. Roy Tracy. Music and a social hour will complete the program.

The hostesses, Mrs. William E. Doron and Mrs. Lester Thorne, hope to welcome every member at this, the opening session of the club.

Entertain in Honor of Neighbor's Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Farina, of Minor street, entertained friends at their home on Monday evening, and tendered a surprise party to Mrs. Antoinette DiAmbrosi, of Minor street, in honor of her birthday anniversary.

Mrs. DiAmbrosi and her niece, Miss Mary Farina, went to the "movies" and upon their return found the guests awaiting them, this completely surprising Mrs. DiAmbrosi.
The evening was spent playing games and dancing. At a late hour the guests were invited to the dining room where refreshments were served. The room was attractively decorated with pink and white crepe paper streamers and a large birthday cake and a bouquet of flowers formed the centerpiece on the table.

Those who enjoyed this affair were: Mr. and Mrs. Louis Farina, Sr. and Mrs. Samuel Farina, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Castor, Mr. and Mrs. James Petrino, Mrs. Rose Castor, Miss Elizabeth Fuoco, Misses Millie and Mary Farina, Louis Farina, Jr., Mrs. Antoinette DiAmbrosi.

Mrs. DiAmbrosi received many pretty birthday gifts.

PRESIDENT STARTS ON TOUR OF TEN STATES

Journey Provides President
Hoover With Opportunity of Aiding Campaign

OHIO VISIT HIS FIRST

By George R. Holmes

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—President Hoover set out today on a week's journey that will take him on a triangular swing through ten States and provide him with the opportunity through the medium of four speeches—to make his first contributions to the current Congressional campaign, in which the record of his administration is the principal issue.

The White House deprecates the term "political" in connection with the President's trip, but fortuitously enough it is timed just five weeks in advance of the November election, and the States in which Mr. Hoover will speak are those in which the contests are keen.

Tomorrow night in Cleveland, before the American Bankers' Convention, he will speak on the business condition of the country, which the Democrats have made an issue by blaming the present depression upon his administration.

From Ohio, Mr. Hoover will return to Washington for the week-end before departing for Boston where on Monday he will deliver major speeches to the American Legion and the American Federation of Labor. A fast overnight run from Boston will carry him into the South for a speech on Tuesday at Kings Mountain, S. C., near the North Carolina border.

En route to Cleveland today, the President stops off in Philadelphia long enough to have a look at the first game of the World's Series.

It has been exactly a year since Mr. Hoover has journeyed away from the Capital on a speech-making trip, and almost two years since he set out across the country, California-bound, secure in the knowledge that he was shortly destined for the Presidency.

Two years ago, when he went to California, business was riding (Continued on Page 4)

Goods Valued at $2,300 Stolen From Morrisville Home

MORRISVILLE, Oct. 1.—Jewelry and bank stock, valued at about $2,300 were stolen from the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Krewson, 210 Arbor Lea avenue, here, supposedly some time on Monday.

The Krewsons had been visiting relatives in Cheltenham for a few days, and upon returning to their home on Monday evening at 7 o'clock, found the place had been ransacked and goods stolen, including the following: pin watches, rings, a platinum bar pin set with five diamonds, and valued at $235, diamond solitaire ring worth $164, two strings of pearls, new suit of clothing, 15 shares of Cheltenham bank stock, a double-barreled shotgun, etc.

It is believed the goods were taken after 3 a. m. Monday, as one of two bottles of milk left by a milkman at that time, was missing later in the day, and the empty bottle was found inside the Krewson home.

Entrance was gained when glass was taken from a window in the sun porch, the door then being opened as the thief reached inside.

State police of the Morrisville detail have been working on the case for the past 36 hours, but as yet have no clues.

Fall Rally of B. Y. P. U. To Take Place Thursday

The Baptist Young People's Union of the Northeast District of Philadelphia will have its first rally for the Fall season in the Baptist Church, Cedar and Walnut streets, on Thursday, October 2nd, at 8 o'clock p. m. The speaker of the evening will be Dr. White, of Frankford, his topic being "Forgiveness of Sin." A special feature will be a vocal solo. Everyone is welcome to attend.

WHITE RUSSIA IS BEING FLOODED WITH MUCH SOVIET PROPAGANDA

Hundreds of Peasants Daily Visit Great Statue of Lenin, An Arm of Which Points the Way To the Dawn of Socialism

Editor's Note: Following is the second of a series of six articles written by Edward L. Deuss, International News Service Staff correspondent in Moscow, following a tour of inspection of White Russia, one of the eight federated republics which constitute the Soviet Union. His stories contain a vast amount of hitherto unpublished information regarding living conditions in this important territory of the Soviet nation.

MOSCOW, Oct. 1.—The Soviets have a fine flare for propaganda. In one year on the outskirts of Minsk they filled in a swamp of about 1,000 acres and turned it into an exposition to show the road that socialism in White Russia has traveled and will travel.

Just inside the entrance there is a monster cement statue of Lenin, founder of the Soviet government and disciple of Karl Marx. In his furious standing pose, Lenin's out-stretched right arm points the way to the dawn of socialism. That imaginary line from the tip of Lenin's first finger to the rising red sun on the horizon is called "Lenin's line." Trotsky and Bukharin deviated from it as that line is visualized in Russia today, and were cast into the political graveyard. Today it is heresy to hold that anyone other than Joseph Stalin, proletarian dictator, envisions the road to socialism as Lenin envisioned it when in his characteristic soapbox speaking pose he raised his short right hand from his stocky body and pointed out towards the eastern horizon.

Three and a half thousand peasants from all over White Russia pay 15 kopeks admission fee daily. They gaze in awe at this stone creature. Many of them don't know it is Lenin. But they follow the line of the finger in and out of the 25 exhibition buildings to see where it will lead them.

On a hillock is a model cow barn and dairy, the equipment imported from the United States or built on the latest American lines. Even the cows are blooded imported Jerseys and Holsteins. Milk maids in pure white linen uniforms are operating the milking machines. Here was a peasant in lappi (birchbark sandals), dirty white roll leggings, whose body was probably strange to him because his clothes rarely came off for a bath, blinking his small blue eyes over the beard that seemed to meet his eyelashes, at this superhuman machine. A dairy maid asked him what he thought of it.

"That certainly is a fine kind of a cow," he replied after fully a minute's reflection.
"Of course, the cow has been bred to give much milk," the girl painfully explained. "But don't you see that this machine milks eight cows at one time?"

It didn't impress the bearded mujik. One could read his mind. He was thinking that he never even dreamed of owning eight cows.

She led the mujik to a fresh cow. He was induced to convince himself that there was milk in the cow's udder. She wiped her hands on her apron and then attached the nipples of the milking machine. In a few minutes the peasant was again asked to see whether any milk remained in the udder. No, it was dry. With a sheepish look that betrayed an attempt to hide his hard-headedness at daring to question the reality of such a marvelous machine (Continued on Page 4)

HERE AND THERE IN BUCKS COUNTY TOWNS

Latrobe Pastor Resigns His Charge to Go to Maryland

Rev. Ralph E. Hartman, a former pastor of the First Reformed Church, Quakertown, has resigned his charge at Latrobe, and has accepted a call to Frederick, Md. Rev. Hartman and family moved to their new home on Tuesday.

At the special meeting of the congregation of the Newtown Baptist Church, it was agreed that a call for a new pastor should not be made at this time, and that the pulpit committee continue to present candidates for the pastorate.

A very novel landscape scheme has been organized and fostered at the Morrisville High School which will eventually make the three acres of ground surrounding the high school buildings the most attractive in this section.

The landscape plan is being developed through the student council which has a faculty and student committee in direct charge of the project. Mr. Schwinger is chairman of the committee sponsoring the landscape development.

Class and home room memorials are planned for the next ten years and in that way the plan provides for ample future additions. The shop and physical science departments are cooperating in carrying out the plan.

Science projects with seeds and seedlings give the school an actual nursery annex and will provide trees for future plantings.
The class of 1930 has left an attractive landscape memorial project and will also present a Japanese cherry as a memorial tree. The class of 1930 has also left ample funds for an attractive trophy case.
Orders for over 200 evergreen transplants have already been placed by the landscape committee and in addition 5 large Lombardy poplar trees have been purchased.

A spare tire laid in the front of the truck of Lewis Satterthwaite at Newtown blew out with a loud explosion one day recently. The door of the truck was broken and the door glass smashed. Mr. Satterthwaite had just stopped at the National Bank when the explosion and sound of breaking glass startled the passersby.

A double anniversary will be observed by the congregation of the New Hope Methodist Church, beginning this week and continuing through the month of October. While it marks the fiftieth anniversary of the erection of the present church building, it also is 100 years since the earliest Methodist meetings were held in New Hope under the itinerant Methodist preachers of that day.

Records show that Rev. David W. Bartine, member of a family of early preachers; the Rev. Edward Page and the Rev. Asbury Boring conducted services in New Hope in 1830, using first the home of Samuel Sutton and later an academy there as the place of worship.

In 1836 a regular society was formed and a year later a small church was built. In 1872 a new church was started and the lower auditorium was put in use two years later. The congregation was small, however, and difficulty was experienced in completing the building, so it was not until October, 1880, that the church was completed and dedicated.

To observe the anniversary a number of prominent speakers will be present for different services and it is hoped to have a number of former pastors present also. The church property has been extensively improved during the past two years. The Rev. Warren A. Smith has been stationed here as pastor for five years and is chairman of the committee arranging the month's services.

AROUND THE WORLD TODAY

KANSAS, Oct. 1.—Robert Buck, 16-year-old flier of Newark, N. J., prepared to resume his coast to coast flight today in which he hopes to shatter the junior transcontinental record held by Eddie Schneider.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The Japanese privy council today ratified the London Naval Treaty, according to an Exchange telegraph dispatch. The plenary session of the council, at which the ratification occurred, was attended by Emperor Hirohito.

ROCKFORD, Ill., Oct. 1.—Police investigating the suicide of 12-year-old Marjorie Mitchell today learned that she had killed herself when she was forced to go to school when she thought she was to ill to attend classes.

She was taken home from Lincoln Junior High School III at the lunch hour. Refused permission to remain at home, she went upstairs, found a revolver and shot herself through the heart while her family lunched.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 1.—Seized in a raid on a Chester poolroom last night by Federal dry agents, a man described by the officials as a member of the gangster fring squad which "bumped off" John Finelli, Philadelphia prohibition agent at the Rising Sun Brewery in Elizabeth, N. J., ten days ago, was held in a city hall cell today charged with murder.

WEST CHESTER, Pa., Oct. 1.—Two persons were dead and two others suffering from injuries today as a result of auto-train collision at Mendenhall near Kennett Square, a few miles from here late yesterday.

The dead: James Halsen, 26, of Wilmington, Del., and Geraldine Jacobs, 4, also of Wilmington.

CHICAGO, Oct. 1.—Responsibility for the recent short selling of wheat by Russian interests was tossed back into the Federal Government's lap today by Chicago Board of Trade officials and members who appeared before Representative Hamilton, Fish's Congressional committee of investigation.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—Leaders in industry, aviation and the arts were to pay a final tribute today to Daniel Guggenheim, when funeral services for the financier and philanthropist are held this afternoon. Burial will be in Brooklyn.

The honorary pallbearers include John D. Ryan, Dwight W. Morrow, Bernard M. Baruch, John Hays Hammond, Elihu Root, Jr., and Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

RAISE GOODLY SUM

The Joseph A. Schumacher Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, gained $270 on the carnival staged at Croysdon several nights, recently. The men and women sponsoring the affair greatly appreciated the patronage of the public in this event.

NAME REV. ROMAGNO RECTOR OF ST. ANN'S

Appointment A Popular One
With Members of Congregation

REV. ROCCO ASSISTANT

Rev. Marcellino Romagno, O. S. S. T., has been named rector of St. Ann's Catholic Church, Wood and Dorrance streets, here, filling the position left vacant by the death several weeks ago of Rev. Isidore Jenne.

The new rector of the local Italian Catholic parish, who was born in Italy, entered the order of the Most Holy Trinity in Italy, at the age of 14 years. Later he pursued studies at the Gregorian University in Rome, and was ordained a priest in the year 1919. Two years later he came to the United States, coming immediately to Bristol to take up work among the Italian people of St. Ann's parish. For the past nine years he has worked faithfully among the parishioners, being assistant rector of St. Ann's.

The position of assistant rector will be filled by the Rev. Fr. Thomas Rocco, O. S. S. T., who is also well known to Bristol people.

Alessandro Conti Dies At His Residence Here

Alessandro Conti, husband of Sarafina Conti, died at his home here early today.

The late Italian resident of Bristol is survived also by the following children: Luigi and Sabesio Conti, and Philomena Mazza, of Bristol; and Maria DiBosso, of Italy.

Funeral will take place from the residence of the son of the deceased, Luigi Conti, 315 Dorrance street, Friday, October 3rd, at nine a. m. High mass will be said at St. Ann's Church at 10 o'clock, burial to be made in St. Mark's Cemetery.

Miss Dorothy Turner and Howard Fabian, of Radcliffe street, enjoyed Sunday in Asbury Park, N. J.

Yom Kippur Will Be Celebrated by Hebrews

The Jewish people will begin its celebration of the Day of Atonement, known in Hebrew as "Yom Kippur," this evening.

The chanting of the awe-inspiring melody of Kol Nidre in all temples and synagogues will mark the beginning of the fast which ends with the Closing Service of the following evening. The Day of Atonement stands as the most solemn and sacred day in Jewish life, and by virtue of its spiritual significance it carries a signal message to the world at large.

When the Jews lived in Palestine, the observation of the Day of Atonement was distinguished by an elaborate ritual. As described in Leviticus XVI, the priests offered sacrifices upon the altar of the Temple to atone for the iniquities and transgressions of the entire people. In the presence of a large assembly which filled the Temple courts the High Priest uttered three confessions of sin: one for his own and the sins of his family, one for the sins of the priesthood, and one for the sins of the entire people. The people prostrated themselves; the Levites sounded the trumpets; and the priests implored God for mercy and forgiveness.

MARRIAGE LICENSES AHEAD OF LAST YEAR

One Hundred and Fifty-One More Than in 1929

AGED COUPLE TO WED

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 1.—There is no decline in Bucks County's marriage market, figures at the office of the Clerk of Orphans' Court indicate. It is practically a certainty that another new record will be made this year in the number of licenses granted at the court house.

With three more months to go the docket shows that 151 more licenses were granted during the first nine months this year than during the same period a year ago.

A new "high mark" for September was set this year when 159 marriage licenses were granted in thirty days. In August there were 124 licenses granted, which made two new records in two months.

Applicants continue to come to Doylestown by the score for their licenses. In September out of 300 applicants that received licenses, 290 of them were non-residents of Bucks County. The city of Philadelphia had sixty applicants while Trenton had sixty-six applicants.

There were thirteen applicants from Bristol, nine from Perkasie, eight from Doylestown, four from Sellersville and Morrisville, two from Quakertown and one from New Hope and Yardley.

In the list of applicants were nineteen men and twenty-one women who had been married before.

Six states were represented in the list of applicants. The docket showed the average age of the male applicants as 30 and the female applicants twenty-five. There were nine divorced men and eight divorced women granted licenses.

The ages of the applicants grouped as they applied for licenses in September, were as follows:

	Male	Female
Under 21 years	3	18
21 to 25 years	66	83
25 to 30 years	45	27
30 to 40 years	18	7
40 to 50 years	8	10
50 to 60 years	7	4
60 to 70 years	1	1
Over 80 years	1	1

Over seventy per cent of the female applicants for licenses in September told the Clerk they had occupations other than housework.

The oldest couple on record in the memory of Deputy Clerk Jacob Shelly received a license yesterday when a Chalfont man eighty years of age was granted a license to marry a woman eighty-one. Both had been married before.

"And they were just as happy as the young folks applying for licenses," Clerk Shelly said yesterday. They were friends together a short space of seventy years ago when they attended school.

Although no record is kept, it is a known fact that approximately fifty per cent of the non-residents securing licenses here are married in Doylestown. The Justices of the Peace and the clergymen of the town have a quite profitable "marrying business." The couples have two Justices of the Peace to pick from in Doylestown in addition to nine ministers from various denominations.

SCOUTS MEET

Troop No. 2, Boy Scouts, met Monday evening with 75 per cent of the troop members in attendance. Marching was practiced and five recruits endeavored to pass their tenderfoot test.

FOOTBALL PRACTICE

All members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians who wish to play football are advised to report for the first indoor practice at Hibernian Hall, this evening. The hour is seven o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Capella, of 424 Jefferson avenue, spent Sunday in Holmesburg, visiting relatives.

FIRE DAMAGES RESTAURANT BLD'G AT PENN VALLEY

Blaze Due to Explosion of Oil Stove, It Is Believed

LOSS ABOUT $2,500.00

Fire Companies from Bristol and Morrisville Respond To the Call

PENN VALLEY, Oct. 1.—Fire this morning considerably damaged the restaurant of Michael Christopher and for a time threatened not only to destroy the entire building with its contents but other buildings which were located nearby.

The flames, it is believed, originated from an oil stove which is thought to have exploded in the kitchen of the building. The blaze fed by the oil quickly spread and burned out the rear portion of the building and spread through the top floor occupied as sleeping quarters.

The damage roughly estimated will total, it is said, about $2,500.

There is some insurance. Christopher says that he had started the oil stove to make coffee and heat water for some early morning trade. It was about 7:40 when the alarm was received at Bristol and companies from Morrisville were also called.

The entire rear portion of the structure was burned away and a portion of the contents was destroyed.

Bristol Consolidated Department and Union of Morrisville were the two companies which got into service. The pumps of both companies were placed in service and supplied good streams from the canal.

Once the water lines were in service the flames were quickly quenched and the front part of the building as well as those across the street were saved.

Mr. Christopher stated that after he lighted the oil stove he left the kitchen and went into the dance hall which adjoins. He says there was an explosion and then the flames shot through the building.

Bus Driver Pays Heavy Fine for Violations

LANGHORNE, Oct. 1.—Charged with four violations of the motor vehicle act, Harry Levin, of 869 North 46th street, Philadelphia, driver for the Xevlin Bus Lines, was fined $106.50 by Justice of the Peace Keating here.

Levin's bus was stopped by Trooper Snader, of the Langhorne State Highway Patrol. Inspection of his license brought the charges that he was not registered as a driver in Pennsylvania; operation of a bus with plates other than those issued; operation with defaced license plates, and a charge against the bus company for committing the offense.

The bus was held up by police, and passengers were forced to wait two and a half hours for another New York bound bus to pick them up. Harry Xevlin, official of the bus company, said the fine for Levin and made a hurried trip to Harrisburg later to obtain a clear title to the bus, to have it released.

IMPROVING THE RACE

Along with other Victorian relics which self-elected best thinkers sought to lay away in the attic after the World War was a certain humanitarianism which flourished along with what-nots, family albums and Victorian morals.

In their somewhat stuffy way, Victorians concluded that evolution proved the world to be growing better, and confidently believed that they were hastening the process when they treated the sick, the poor, the insane, the incapable and even the criminal with rather more consideration than had previously been the custom.

They were put in their place by a post-war school of popularizers who read a little of the new biology and then loudly proclaimed that humanitarianism was all spinach. Hereby, it was announced, was everything, environment nothing. Consequently, it was of no use to be indulgent to the defective after they were born. The only way to improve the human race was to prevent them from being born.

The advantage of a creed like this to one who is himself conscious of being superior is obvious. He may look forward to a day when the world will be redeemed from misery by being peopled by individuals in his own image. He need not worry over the sufferings of the unfortunate, for they are nature's way of eliminating bad human stock.

But this neo-paganism is wide of the facts. Better stock in the future is not produced by neglecting the poor stock of the present. We must work with the material at hand and make it better if the super-man is to be forthcoming.

A VANISHING MARKET

The old-time farmer who planted his corn in the "new of the moon" and his potatoes when Luna was in hiding; who depended upon the zodiac signs for guidance in cutting weeds and weaning pigs, scoffed at the idea of consulting "city fellers" concerning planting, harvesting or marketing his crops. The telephone, the radio, the rural mail carrier and the newspaper have convinced tillers of the soil that the banker in his office in the city is frequently a good authority from whom to obtain suggestions worth heeding concerning not only the marketing of crops but also planting and harvesting.

It is because economic conditions of the country have a vital bearing upon financial affairs generally and because "big business" and agriculture are closely related that the banker is fully informed at all times on farm conditions.

Bankers were first to warn farmers of the danger of too rapid a shift from horse power to motor traction on the farm. The warning wasn't heeded and the dangers were found to be only too real.

In substituting motors for horses in farm operations the farmer curtailed the consumption of corn and oats, while, with the aid of motorized equipment, he increased production of both grains. In 10 years the horse population was reduced by 5,000,000 horses. That number multiplied by the amount of corn and oats a horse eats in one day gives the approximate cut in the demand for the two grains.

W.N.U. SERVICE

"No," Roberta said almost angrily. "I cannot come tomorrow. I will come Wednesday."

There was silence, a silence that spoke of displeasure on Navarro's part. Then he said: "No, I cannot come Wednesday, but I will come Thursday."

It was the girl who hesitated, and then made up her mind. "All right, Thursday, then. Where?"

"Here." Why waste words on an obstinate girl?

"No," Roberta said quickly. "I think you ought to come to the house and meet my father, don't you? I don't like dodging about to avoid father and the crowd."

Navarro frowned. This girl would upset all plans unless she was kept in hand. "I'll come for you. I'll wait for you on the river road."

"All right," Roberta agreed slowly. "Come to the house if you like."

"No, the road," Jack replied.

He paid the check and they went out into the soft spring dusk, and he put her into her car, kissed her hand and whispered that she was adorable, and then stood lighting a cigarette as the watched her tear along the highway at sixty miles an hour. It was slow work he told himself, but at least he had gotten somewhere and learned something today.

Lady Sandison, having finished her own tale promptly, had had to listen to her brother's recital of his life and triumphs and then to a dissertation on Roberta, her beauty and talents, and finally to a short resume of Rob's difficulties with her.

Listening, Aggy's lips had closed tightly. She was not one to approve of halfway measures, and was in full sympathy with her brother's determination that things should not go on this way, for the girl's own sake.

"What now, precisely, are you thinking to do?" she finally asked. MacBeth looked at her appealingly. "I am puzzled," he admitted, with the frankness of the truly great. "What would you do?"

"It is not for me to say," retorted Lady Sandison promptly. "I have seen her but the once."

"I'm not one for driving a girl to open rebellion."

"No," agreed Aggy.

"Come, Aggy, you always had a tremendous lot of sense and I'm in need of a woman's eye as well as my own. Could you be persuaded to run this house for me, Aggy, for money?"

"You know well I'd do it for love," Aggy told him sternly, since love is not a word to be used often and requires cautious use even between relations.

"But that would defeat your plans. Use sense, woman. Nobody but you and I need know our arrangement, and would it not be better for you to work for me than for a stranger?"

"It would depend. How much authority would you give me? Things must lie in my own hands, if I'm to make headway and help you."

"Done," said Rob MacBeth. "I paid my last housekeeper two hundred and fifty dollars a month."

"Mighty me, Rob! I could not charge you the like of that!"

"It will be a saving if I pay you three hundred," said the crafty Rob, "you to take over the entire direction of the house, leaving Roberta with nothing but her own affairs to attend to. She won't like that—"

"Fine, I see your plan, but the pay's far too high. Say two hundred."

"Three hundred or nothing!"

"Have it your own way, but I'm not to be used openly against the lass."

Rob was so busy planning his campaign that he did not notice how her little blue eyes were twinkling. "I'm just going to make Miss High-and-Mighty see where she gets off, if she doesn't behave," he said.

"Have it your own way," agreed Aggy, demurely. "What about Sir George?"

"Can you not help him to a place or use him here?"

Rob MacBeth stared at his sister. He said nothing for what seemed to her a long time.

"I can't ask him to do anything menial," he announced, puzzled. "You cannot," she declared shortly. "I don't know what he's fitted for."

"He's had a lot of expensive schooling; a lot of still more expensive soldiering, when he was hardly more than a laddie, and a thin time of it in the wilds of Central America."

"I'm," said her brother, frowning, "I'm away," announced his sister, rising, "to look over your kitchen and see if I can get together a tea for you, and him and me. You can be thinking."

She started toward the door. "I'm very much puzzled," said her brother.

"Don't strain yourself," Lady Sandison told him drily. "There's such things as secretaries in America, are there not? And you lying here help-

"By George! That's an idea!"

Aggy looked at him without speaking, and left for the kitchen. That Rob, after all these years, had accepted her and her problems, including Sir George, without either astonishment or hesitation, did not seem to her remarkable. It was what she had expected. Would she not have done the same thing for Rob?

Some twenty odd minutes later she reappeared, carrying a tray on which toast, deliciously browned, jam, cake and tea were invitingly spread forth, and went toward the library. Evidently Sir George had assisted MacBeth to get there, for she could hear the two men talking.

Both looked up at her, and Sir George sprang to clear a place on the table and take the tray from her.

"You should have called me, Aggy," he said reproachfully.

"You're a wonder, Aggy," declared her brother, looking at the toast. "I've been offering Sir George the post of secretary, private secretary, a sort of liaison officer between me, in my crippled state here, and my New York office. I have a secretary there, but I want him at the office. I need a man who can go to the city and get things done for me and at the same time take a look outside at the various jobs, and come here and give me an idea as to whether my plans are being carried out or not."

Lady Sandison looked at him and nodded approval. "You have done well to take Sir George here. Have a bit of toast, Rob, and let me put jam on it. It will set you up. And to think you two have planned it out all yourselves, without any help!" She looked at them both admiringly.

Sir George returned the look warily. He knew his Aggy of old, but her brother smiled broadly. It was warming to him to find how much he liked Aggy again. Despite her handicaps—poverty, her lack of family—had she not contrived to marry a baronet? Robert MacBeth might think that titles meant nothing to him, but Aggy's title and Sir George's presence in his house were a source of pride.

"While we're sipping our tea," said Lady Sandison, comfortably aware that Sir George was admiring her, "you'll maybe be able to tell me, Rob, where Sir George will hide, and how late does your daughter generally stay out when there's dinner to get and none to get it?"

Robert MacBeth looked worried. "She ought to be home. We quarreled, of course, this morning, but I hardly thought she'd leave me alone so long."

"Something by-ordinary's detained her," declared Aggy. Ever since she had glimpsed Roberta this morning, she had had her mind made up about that young lady, but she was not telling Roberta's father. "Don't put yourself out, Rob. She's no run away. She'll be home soon."

"Oh, do you think so, Aggy? You're a great comfort," then he turned to Sir George. "I'd like you to stay here, Sir George, if it suits you. It will be best for me, and there's plenty of room."

Sir George, looking like an embarrassed Apollo, thanked him. He was thinking rapidly that never had his luck been greater than now that Aggy had taken the helm.

"Afore your daughter gets back," resumed Aggy, watching first one then the other, but evidently satisfied in her own mind that they were all getting along nicely, "are we to use our titles here, or put them by, as you might say, until we go home again?"

Robert MacBeth looked puzzled. He had forgotten that Roberta knew nothing about this aunt, except that she was a poor and obstinate Scotch woman, who foolishly refused the money he had offered. How would she take this new element he was introducing into his home? Would Roberta see her aunt's real worth or only her odd ways and clothes and queer modes of expression?

"If I could only keep it from her," muttered Robert MacBeth, "I might try it as an experiment."

"I wouldn't," declared Sir George quickly. "It's hardly fair. If we're to be in the house, she should know all about us, I think, sir."

"It would be a grand lesson to her if we kept it from her," declared her Aunt Aggy.

"Roberta isn't that kind," retorted her father indignantly. "She's not a snob. She's just a naughty child."

Sir George put up his hand for silence and rose, but before he could speak the door was flung open.

"Hello, Dad!" Roberta called. "What's happened? No lights in the garage. No sign of Willy. No one in the kitchen. Where are the maids?"

"They went away with Willy, as soon as your back was turned," her father told her. "Didn't you expect it?"

IMPROVING THE RACE

Along with other Victorian relics which self-elected best thinkers sought to lay away in the attic after the World War was a certain humanitarianism which flourished along with what-nots, family albums and Victorian morals.

In their somewhat stuffy way, Victorians concluded that evolution proved the world to be growing better, and confidently believed that they were hastening the process when they treated the sick, the poor, the insane, the incapable and even the criminal with rather more consideration than had previously been the custom.

They were put in their place by a post-war school of popularizers who read a little of the new biology and then loudly proclaimed that humanitarianism was all spinach. Heredity, it was announced, was everything, environment nothing. Consequently, it was of no use to be indulgent to the defective after they were born. The only way to improve the human race was to prevent them from being born.

The advantage of a creed like this to one who is himself conscious of being superior is obvious. He may look forward to a day when the world will be redeemed from misery by being peopled by individuals in his own image. He need not worry over the sufferings of the unfortunate, for they are nature's way of eliminating bad human stock.

But this neo-paganism is wide of the facts. Better stock in the future is not produced by neglecting the poor stock of the present. We must work with the material at hand and make it better if the super-man is to be forthcoming.

A VANISHING MARKET

The old-time farmer who planted his corn in the "new of the moon" and his potatoes when Luna was in hiding; who depended upon the zodiac signs for guidance in cutting weeds and weaning pigs; scoffed at the idea of consulting "city fellers" concerning planting, harvesting or marketing his crops. The telephone, the radio, the rural mail carrier and the newspaper have convinced tillers of the soil that the banker in his office in the city is frequently a good authority from whom to obtain suggestions worth heeding concerning not only the marketing of crops but also planting and harvesting.

It is because economic conditions of the country have a vital bearing upon financial affairs generally and because "big business" and agriculture are closely related that the banker is fully informed at all times on farm conditions.

Bankers were first to warn farmers of the danger of too rapid a shift from horse power to motor traction on the farm. The warning wasn't heeded and the dangers were found to be only too real.

In substituting motors for horses in farm operations the farmer curtailed the consumption of corn and oats, while, with the aid of motorized equipment, he increased production of both grains. In 10 years the horse population was reduced by 5,000,000 horses. That number multiplied by the amount of corn and oats a horse eats in one day gives the approximate cut in the demand for the two grains.

"No," Roberta said almost angrily. "I cannot come tomorrow. I will come Wednesday."

There was silence, a silence that spoke of displeasure on Navarro's part. Then he said: "No, I cannot come Wednesday, but I will come Thursday."

It was the girl who hesitated, and then made up her mind. "All right, Thursday, then. Where?"

"Here." Why waste words on an obstinate girl?

"No," Roberta said quickly. "I think you ought to come to the house and meet my father, don't you? I don't like dodging about to avoid father and the crowd."

Navarro frowned. This girl would upset all plans unless she was kept in hand. "I'll come for you. I'll wait for you on the river road."

"All right," Roberta agreed slowly. "Come to the house if you like."

"No, the road," Jack replied.

He paid the check and they went out into the soft spring dusk, and he put her into her car, kissed her hand and whispered that she was adorable, and then stood lighting a cigarette as the watched her tear along the highway at sixty miles an hour. It was slow work he told himself, but at least he had gotten somewhere and learned something today.

Lady Sandison, having finished her own tale promptly, had had to listen to her brother's recital of his life and triumphs and then to a dissertation on Roberta, her beauty and talents, and finally to a short resume of Rob's difficulties with her.

Listening, Aggy's lips had closed tightly. She was not one to approve of halfway measures, and was in full sympathy with her brother's determination that things should not go on this way, for the girl's own sake.

"What now, precisely, are you thinking to do?" she finally asked.

MacBeth looked at her appealingly. "I am puzzled," he admitted, with the frankness of the truly great. "What would you do?"

"It is not for me to say," retorted Lady Sandison promptly. "I have seen her but the once."

"I'm not one for driving a girl to open rebellion."

"No," agreed Aggy.

"Come, Aggy, you always had a tremendous lot of sense and I'm in need of a woman's eye as well as my own. Could you be persuaded to run this house for me, Aggy, for money?"

"You know well I'd do it for love," Aggy told him sternly, since love is not a word to be used often and requires cautious use even between relations.

"But that would defeat your plans. Use sense, woman. Nobody but you and I need know our arrangement, and would it not be better for you to work for me than for a stranger?"

"It would depend. How much authority would you give me? Things must lie in my own hands, if I'm to make headway and help you."

"Done," said Rob MacBeth. "I paid my last housekeeper two hundred and fifty dollars a month."

"Mighty me, Rob! I could not charge you the like of that!"

"It will be a saving if I pay you three hundred," said the crafty Rob, "you to take over the entire direction of the house, leaving Roberta with nothing but her own affairs to attend to. She won't like that."

"Fine, I see your plan, but the pay's far too high. Say two hundred."

"Three hundred or nothing!"

"Have it your own way, but I'm not to be used openly against the lass."

Rob was so busy planning his campaign that he did not notice how her little blue eyes were twinkling. "I'm just going to make Miss High-and-Mighty see where she gets off, if she doesn't behave," he said.

"Have it your own way," agreed Aggy, demurely. "What about Sir George?"

"Can you no help him to a place or use him here?"

Rob MacBeth stared at his sister. He said nothing for what seemed to her a long time.

"I can't ask him to do anything menial," he announced, puzzled.

"You cannot," she declared shortly. "I don't know what he's fitted for."

"He's had a lot of expensive schooling; a lot of still more expensive soldiering, when he was hardly more than a lad, and a thin time of it in the wilds of Central America."

"I'm," said her brother, frowning. "I'm away," announced his sister, rising, "to look over your kitchen and see if I can get together a tea for you, and him and me. You can be thinking. She started toward the door."

"I'm very much puzzled," said her brother.

"Don't strain yourself," Lady Sandison told him drily. "There's such things as secretaries in America, are there not? And you lying here help-

"By George! That's an idea!"

Aggy looked at him without speaking, and left for the kitchen. That Rob, after all these years, had accepted her and her problems, including Sir George, without either astonishment or hesitation, did not seem to her remarkable. It was what she had expected. Would she not have done the same thing for Rob?

Some twenty odd minutes later she reappeared, carrying a tray on which toast, deliciously browned, jam, cake and tea were invitingly spread forth, and went toward the library. Evidently Sir George had assisted MacBeth to get there, for she could hear the two men talking.

Both looked up at her, and Sir George sprang to clear a place on the table and take the tray from her.

"You should have called me, Aggy," he said reproachfully.

"You're a wonder, Aggy," declared her brother, looking at the toast. "I've been offering Sir George the post of secretary, private secretary, a sort of liaison officer between me, in my crippled state here, and my New York office. I have a secretary there, but I want him at the office. I need a man who can go to the city and get things done for me and at the same time take a look outside at the various jobs, and come here and give me an idea as to whether my plans are being carried out or not."

Lady Sandison looked at him and nodded approval. "You have done well to take Sir George here. Have a bit of toast, Rob, and let me put jam on it. It will set you up. And to think you two have planned it out all yourselves, without any help!" She looked at them both admiringly.

Sir George returned the look warily. He knew his Aggy of old, but her brother smiled broadly. It was warning to him to find how much he liked Aggy again. Despite her handicaps—poverty, her lack of family—had she not contrived to marry a baronet! Robert MacBeth might think that titles meant nothing to him, but Aggy's title and Sir George's presence in his house were a source of pride.

"While we're sipping our tea," said Lady Sandison, comfortably aware that Sir George was admiring her, "you'll maybe be able to tell me, Rob, where Sir George will hide, and how late does your daughter generally stay out when there's dinner to get and none to get it?"

Robert MacBeth looked worried. "She ought to be home. We quarreled, of course, this morning, but I hardly thought she'd leave me alone so long."

"Something by-ordinary's detained her," declared Aggy. Ever since she had glimpsed Roberta this morning, she had had her mind made up about that young lady, but she was not telling Roberta's father. "Don't put yourself out, Rob. She's no run away. She'll be home soon."

"Oh, do you think so, Aggy? You're a great comfort," then he turned to Sir George. "I'd like you to stay here, Sir George, if it suits you. It will be best for me, and there's plenty of room."

Sir George, looking like an embarrassed Apollo, thanked him. He was thinking rapidly that never had his luck been greater than now that Aggy had taken the helm.

"Afore your daughter gets back," resumed Aggy, watching first one then the other, but evidently satisfied in her own mind that they were all getting along nicely, "are we to use our titles here, or put them by, as you might say, until we go home again?"

Robert MacBeth looked puzzled. He had forgotten that Roberta knew nothing about this aunt, except that she was a poor and obstinate Scotch woman, who foolishly refused the money he had offered. How would she take this new element he was introducing into his home? Would Roberta see her aunt's real worth or only her odd ways and clothes and queer modes of expression?

"If I could only keep it from her," muttered Robert MacBeth, "I might try it as an experiment."

"I wouldn't," declared Sir George quickly. "It's hardly fair. If we're to be in the house, she should know all about us, I think, sir."

"It would be a grand lesson to her if we kept it from her," declared her Aunt Aggy.

"Roberta isn't that kind," retorted her father indignantly. "She's not a snob. She's just a naughty child."

Sir George put up his hand for silence and rose, but before he could speak the door was flung open.

"Hello, Dad!" Roberta called. "What's happened? No lights in the garage. No sign of Willy. No one in the kitchen. Where are the maids?"

"They went away with Willy, as soon as your back was turned," her father told her. "Didn't you expect it?"

AND CAMELS are easy to smoke. Here's smoke with joy in it—a light-hearted cigarette—merry and mild. Don't confuse Camel's mellow mildness with mere flatness or lack of flavor. Every bit of delicate aroma in Camel's naturally mild, sun-mellowed tobaccos is preserved by scientific care in manufacture—kept in Camels for you to enjoy. And you can smoke them all day with never a hint of throat discomfort.

Mild—not flat. Modern smokers are awake to that difference. They're swinging to Camels, and the mild fragrance of a cigarette made to be enjoyed.

SPORTS

QUOIT LEAGUE ENDS SUCCESSFUL SEASON

After a most successful season, the Bristol Quoit League closed with an interesting tournament, the Thomas L. Leedom Company team and the Paterson Parchment Paper Company team playing off the finals.

Through the keen eyed management of John Brehm and the wide-awake captain, Russell Barton, the Leedom team carried off first honors. This team made a record for itself, and the president of the league, Samuel Shiro, feels sure this record will stand for a long time, the team having won 35 match games, which is every one, not losing a single match and giving a percentage of 1,000 points. Their total points amounted to 5191.

The Paterson Parchment Paper Company's team, with Wesley Booz as captain, made a very good showing, winning a total of 29 games, only losing 6 games, which is remarkable. Their total number of points amounted to 4939.

Harriman Men's Club and the Casey team played an unofficial game and finished with a tie score. The honors were given to the Casey team and with Captain James Roche, this team won a total of 15 games, losing 20 games, and had a total of 4540 points. Harriman Men's Club team won 23 games and lost 12. Captain Earl Lynn deserves a lot of credit for the work which he did. Their total number of points amounted to 4744.

The next tie for 3rd and 4th places was between the Moose team and the A. O. H. team. Neill McDevitt, captain of the A. O. H., and Pat O'Grady, captain of the Moose team, decided to let the tie stand until next year. The A. O. H. team won 24 games and lost 11, and their total number of points was 4424. The Moose team won 9 games and lost 26, and their points totaled 4233.

Barney Murray and his boys received seventh place. The American Legion boys had bad breaks and were forced to forfeit a number of games. The showing made was remarkable under the conditions, having won 7 games and lost 28, with a total number of 3816 points.

Herman Encke and the Rohm & Haas team bring up the rear, and like the "Phillies," they said, "Wait until next year. They won 11 games and lost 24, receiving 3932 points.

Jesse Headley of the Paterson Parchment Paper Company team, was crowned single quoit pitcher of Bristol, and he certainly deserved the honor. The finals were played off between Headley and Barton, and Headley defeated Barton two out of three games. The games were as follows:

First game—
Headley	Barton
Headley	Barton
Headley	Barton

The best double team composed of William Johns and Howard Steel, of Harriman Men's Club, won a hard-fought battle. The finals were played with Jess Headley and Walter Rittler, of Paterson Parchment Paper Company's team, and the games were as follows:

First game—
Johns and Steel	Headley and Rittler
Johns and Steel	Headley and Rittler
Johns and Steel	Headley and Rittler
Johns and Steel	Headley and Rittler

The season for Quoits being over, the president is much pleased with the showing made and he feels sure that next year, with the distance of 30 feet, hubs pointed and on an angle of 60 degrees, the league will make a better showing at home and will be more capable of competing with outside teams. A banquet is being planned for the near future, to be held in the Harriman Men's Club, at which time cups will be presented to teams winning first and second places, and to the single and double champions.

Baseball Reigns As World's Series Gets Under Way

treatments by Dr. Hyland, the Cardinals' club physician.

The medical verdict was that while Frisch is not in the best of condition he will be able to play.

Heavy betting on the outcome of the series was reported today and the odds, which had been 13 to 10 with the Athletics the favorites, were hammered down to even money. Betting was six to five on the A's providing "Lefty" Grove pitches, and even money if Mack nominated any other pitcher.

Mayor Victor J. Miller of St. Louis, laid a bet of $2,000 against $3,000 on the Cardinals and tried to get down more wagers at the same odds. But he was offered on better than even money this morning.

For three days holders of applications for World Series tickets have been storming the box office at Shibe Park. Every seat in the place has been sold for today's game.

Speculators have experienced considerable difficulty in obtaining pasted boards. The local police and Federal officials have cooperated splendidly with the ball club officials and baseball commissioner, Kenesaw M. Landis, today expressed himself as being "highly pleased" with the manner in which the tickets were doled out to the public.

Every incoming train this morning and last night brought its quota of World Series visitors. Hundreds of others came by automobile. The hotel lobbies were thronged this morning with sports luminaries from all parts of the country, including many famous ball players and managers.

"Nick" Altrock and "Al" Schacht, the baseball clowns, who will cavort on the field before the game for the edification and amusement of the spectators, are on hand, wisecracking everybody in sight.

VISIT HERE

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rielly, of Philadelphia, were week-end guests of Mrs. Rielly's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Frake, of 620 Cedar street. Mr. and Mrs. Rielly were enroute to their home in Philadelphia after spending their honeymoon in New York.

Three Machines Crash; One Little Girl Hurt

A little girl was slightly hurt and three automobiles more or less damaged early last evening when two of the three cars crashed and one of the pair was knocked into the third car.

The child hurt is Florence Carlo, 227 Washington street. She suffered cuts about the chin and neck.

A machine operated by Florence McBride, 236 Taft street, started out from the west side of Pond street, between Harrison and Jackson streets. The McBride machine struck the Di Carlo car and turned it over. The top was smashed. There were three children in the machine with John Di Carlo, but only one of them was hurt.

The McBride car then struck the machine of Harry Wessaw which was parked along the curb line.

Troop 5 Scouts Have An Enjoyable Dinner; See Movies

Troop 5, Boy Scouts, held a dinner on Thursday evening in the room of the Harriman Men's Club. About 26 boys were present, and 25 of those in attendance are actually registered for the coming year.

Songs were enjoyed during dinner. Among the speakers were: Robert X. Perry, district representative; Rev.

Margerum, pastor of the Harriman M. E. Church, and David Neill, scoutmaster of Troop 2.

Five committeemen were present, and the dinner was served by the committeemen's wives.

Thomas Collier entertained the group with three reels of moving pictures, these including preparation of Commander Byrd for the Antarctic expedition; and the evolution of the electric turbine.

high tide of prosperity, and a year ago, when he went to Detroit and Cincinnati and thence down the Ohio to Louisville, the business skies were still serene. But today he set out under far different conditions—his administration a third gone, business depressed, and a savage battle on for control of Congress.

The speeches which Mr. Hoover will deliver during the next week are expected to constitute the administration's answer to the criticism with which it has been deluged by the Democrats and Insurgents since the business smash of a year ago. Presumably, they will sound the keynote of Republican defense, to be taken up and re-sounded by party candidates in the Congressional district battlegrounds all over the country.

There is keen speculation as to whether Mr. Hoover will take any cognizance of the bitter wet-and-dry battles in some of the States he will visit. Both in Ohio and in Massachusetts the Senatorial fights are keen and close, with the Republican candidates bone-dry and their Democratic opponents wringing-wet.

Thus far Mr. Hoover has scrupulously refrained from any public cognizance of these battles, and the betting is he will not break his silence on Prohibition on this trip.

It was a large official party that pulled out of the Capital aboard the Presidential special this morning, but only part of it was to continue beyond the ball game at Philadelphia.

Accompanying Mr. Hoover to Cleveland were Postmaster Gen'l Brown, Assistant Secretary of the Navy David S. Ingalls, Secretary George Akerson; Capt. Joel T. Boone, White House physician; Capt. Callen Buchanan, Col. Campbell Hodges, and Commander Russell Train, besides the usual complement of Secret Service men and newspaper correspondents.

Going as far as Philadelphia were: Secretary of War Hurley, Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, Secretary of the Interior Wilbur, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hope, and Larry Richey. At Philadelphia, the President's world's series party was to be joined by Secretary of Labor Davis; Jeremiah Milbank, the New York banker; Jay Cooke, the Philadelphia financier, and Daniel E. Pomeroy, Republican National Committeeman for New Jersey.

The Presidential train will leave Philadelphia immediately after the game for Cleveland, arriving there at noon tomorrow.

chine, he laughed and said, "What can't they do nowadays!"

Not a single actual dairy farm in White Russia is equipped like this, but the peasant sees, or may see the sun toward which Lenin pointed.

There is a jam syrup and fruit wine factory in actual operation to show the people what the Soviets intend to do with a million tons of scrub wind-fall apples that now go to waste every year. The industrial buildings show samples of machines, wearing apparel, boots, shoes, and a multitude of things manufactured by White Russian industry. A ticket listing the cost of production of each article is attached.

Thus one finds that the production cost of a fair quality cotton and wool mixed two-piece men's suit is 36.14 rubles (nominally $18), itemized as follows: material, 20.25 rubles; labor, 3.89 rubles, and administrative expenses, 2 rubles. This is fairly typical.

For the hundreds of manufactured goods on display the average cost of materials was 81 per cent of the total cost, labor 11 per cent and administration 8 per cent, showing the general prevailing exorbitant cost of materials and the low labor costs due to low wages. The labor cost includes social insurance, sick benefits, pensions and vacation expenses which the factory pays for the workers, showing that money wages are actually lower than listed. The administrative expenses do not include interest charges on invested capital, taxes, amortization of plant and equipment. These charges together with profits are included in the price which the factories and trusts charge the wholesale co-operative societies for the goods. The suit of clothes, for example, was sold to the co-operative for 50.85 rubles, and by the time it reached the individual purchaser it cost about 60 rubles. It meant that the average industrial worker had to work a month to buy a suit.

The sawmill and woodworking industry, very important in White Russia, whose area is about 25 per cent forest, has a building all its own. There were samples of matches produced at the big factory at Rjev almost solely for export. One wonders how the materialistic Soviet ideology ever allowed the match trust officials to cater to the bourgeois public abroad by giving brands of Soviet matches such names as "Lucky" (spelled "Luckie") Dream or "Pandora" with a picture of Pandora opening the box which loosed all ills upon men. These brands were for export to England. A Baltimore, Maryland, cigar company had its trade name on another brand of matches made for it by special order.

There was also a model of the sash, door and window frame works at Babrinsk, which operates exclusively for export to England. Two types of wardrobe cases were on exhibition. The factories were to begin manufacturing one of these as a standard type, and at the exhibition visitors were asked to pass judgment on which type they liked best, the majority vote to guide the woodworking trust's selection. Both cases sold for 150 rubles at retail, for which the average industrial worker would have to work about two months.

Charts, diagrams covered the walls to supplement the samples or models of manufactured goods and agricultural goods and agricultural produce. At the fruit raising exhibit one could find out how many fruit trees all countries had. In Russia, for example there were 80 fruit trees per 100 inhabitants as against 250 in the United States.

Two restaurants fed the crowds at reasonable prices. One had a good "tschee" (cabbage soup), soup meat and potatoes and campote. No drink stronger than beer is for sale. This fair is intellectual entertainment and stimulation. No alcohol is allowed to befog the none-too-keen brain to the artistic, effective exhibits. Kindergartens, schools, machines, tested seeds, red apples, decent apartment houses are not inventions of Marxism. They are inventions of capitalism. But here they are displayed with pomp and glory as material benefits of socialism—benefits which mujiks and illiterate workers grasp more easily than theoretical discussions of how socialism ends class oppression exploitation of labor—things which the peasant might easily misunderstand under present conditions.
